

Media diversity is an important staple to American democracy. Living in an area where large conglomerates control 60% of the air waves I am very concerned about the lack of diversified, well-structured opinions aired on important issues such as media consolidation, fair elections, taxation, militarization and socialization of health care. The bottom line is the welfare of the American people, not the effectiveness of advertising.